I'm looking into developing my own 2D side-scroller (of sorts) using C# and Monogame. I'd love to hear some recommendations on where to get started, such as books, or various forums, or perhaps even online courses. Back in 2013, I started learning a little bit of C#, but didn't manage to get very far before life happened.

I read that C++ was most common in game dev, but I didn't want to go C++ because at the time I had barely done any programming in a manual memory management language. Also I'd heard a lot of bad things about C++ like how messy it got over the years and how you need a lot more code to do something than C#.

Can someone recommend me a good book (or course on udemy) to start programming with MonoGame for beginners? lozzajp 2016-08-23 09:14:46 UTC #2. I found this one to be quite a good start. Just note the content pipeline is a bit different than the way MG handles it but the rest is pretty much the same.
